

From the Editors' Desk

This issue (the Monsoon Number) of the journal is being published with a delay of one week or so. The absence of dedicated editorial staff, which we mentioned in the earlier issue, has been the main root cause of the delay this time; but that we have to bear for some more time. On the other hand the contributions coming from all corners of the academic community in this state cutting across the various disciplines of modern science encourage us much. It is more so, because the students of different institutions continue to contribute this journal with the findings from the projects they carry out. These students' projects may be envisaged as the first stepping stones of our potential young colleagues in future, in the field of scientific research.

We are thinking of bringing out formally a printed version of this online journal as well. The contributors will be provided with a copy of that version, if they require, at some nominal cost. All these things are in planning and processing stage right now. When the things get concrete shape, we will obviously announce it in this online version too.

The present issue contains six articles encompassing almost all the sections of this journal, originally thought of. We already have some contributions waiting to be published in the next issue (September issue), the Festival number.
