

From the Editors' Desk

The last issue of the present volume is being published. The present issue consists of six articles covering different areas of science. The first two contributions are coming under the category of original research reports. Three among the rests are review articles on different fields of scientific research. Apart from these, this issue is particularly enriched more due to a contribution in another section of this journal i.e. “The interface – science, environment and society”. We express our earnest gratitude to the authors from different institutions of higher education and to the readers of this journal.

This present issue is again published with a delay, more than a fortnight in this case, due to different factors including the server and internet connection problem. But still, it may not be too late for a journal run by a non-professional editorial board. Anyway these glitches are hoped to be removed in future. We wish a happy new year for every one. The first issue of the next volume is scheduled to be unveiled on the coming vernal equinox.
