The First World War exhausted the resources of the colonies and the Second led to the environmental disaster with the introduction of nuclear warfare. The newly born States under the post-war process of decolonization, however, followed the western model and divided the world into 'developed', 'developing' and 'underdeveloped' countries. The categorization was further extended into the developed global 'north' and the developing global 'south'. Even the Rio Conference of 1992 failed to bridge this chasm. The only viable international solution for the misunderstanding regarding the power play over environmental problems is to agree on maintaining ecological balance and opt for sustainable development worldwide. A consensus, irrespective of the 'self' and the 'other', on issues like 'world peace' and 'green world' can, at this juncture, deliver the future generations from this predicament.
